

Sheridan College

SOURCE: Sheridan Scholarly Output Undergraduate Research Creative Excellence

Canadian Military History Research Posters

Faculty of Humanities & Social Sciences (FHASS)

11-2016

Canadian Servicewomen and the Second World War

Kimberly Gomez

Kayla Troy

Lina Vargas Jaramillo

Fozia Yasmeen

Follow this and additional works at: http://source.sheridancollege.ca/swfhass_military_posters

 Part of the Canadian History Commons, Military History Commons, Public History Commons, and the Women's History Commons

SOURCE Citation

Gomez, Kimberly; Troy, Kayla; Vargas Jaramillo, Lina; and Yasmeen, Fozia, "Canadian Servicewomen and the Second World War" (2016). Canadian Military History Research Posters. Book 9.

http://source.sheridancollege.ca/swfhass_military_posters/9

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 4.0 License.

This Student Work is brought to you for free and open access by the Faculty of Humanities & Social Sciences (FHASS) at SOURCE: Sheridan Scholarly Output Undergraduate Research Creative Excellence. It has been accepted for inclusion in Canadian Military History Research Posters by an authorized administrator of SOURCE: Sheridan Scholarly Output Undergraduate Research Creative Excellence. For more information, please contact source@sheridancollege.ca.

Canadian Servicewomen and the Second World War

“We Serve That Men May Fight”

In 1940, the Canadian military realized it had a manpower shortage. It decided to put more women in uniform to serve in support positions, freeing up men for active service.

Canadian women served in a wide variety of roles - drivers, cooks, clerks, mechanics, signallers, military intelligence personnel, just to name a few - in the Royal Canadian Navy, the Army, and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

By the end of the war, 50,000 Canadian women had enlisted, with thousands serving overseas.

Women did not receive equal pay or benefits for their service, which was protested by the National Council of Women. When this slowed recruitment, the Department of National Defence increased pay to 80% of what men were paid - a fact that many women continued to resent.

