Director's Notes

Berlin in 1928 was a thriving hotbed of art, science and commerce. Having weathered the horror and humiliation of the First World War (then known only as the Great War, for there was no indication that worse was coming) the city clung to renewed life with decadent art and jazz. A booming (but false) economy promised instant riches within everyone's grasp. But even as the guests at the Grand Hotel clambered over each other in pursuit of their lofty dreams, a storm was looming. The stock market had begun to crack and investors were turning to the wildly rising and equally precarious American market, the chasm between the haves and the have-nots was widening, and a showman politician was lying in wait for his chance to lead the people into another war and help make Germany great again.

This is the foundation of Grand Hotel, a musical brought to vivid life on Broadway in 1989 by Tommy Tune, a production I was fortunate to see as a young actor. It's a joy to explore this challenging piece, its complicated characters and its unconventionally cinematic score with these wonderful students — and it's an equal joy to share it with you.
