FROM THE PLAYWRIGHT

This seemingly light musical comedy is what writer Shelby Foote would call “the bastard child.” Every playwright has one - an idea that always seems to languish unfinished for years in a filing cabinet. It’s not that it’s a bad play - though I have plenty of those crammed into my filing cabinet as well, believe me. The bastard child is something entirely different and far more frustrating. It is a good project that gets postponed by life’s little intrusions. Originally conceived by composer Steve Thomas and myself in 2000 (AD), The Barbecue King was initially developed in small sections at the Alumnae and Tarragon Theatres. It’s always been fun and rewarding to work on. Audiences have appreciated what little of it we have presented. So why didn’t we finish it sooner? Well... life intruded. And in that time The Barbecue King has become a bit of a period piece as the middle class characters represented here have been steadily priced out of cottage country by the Kurt and Goldie’s of the world. Regardless of this fact, it is very satisfying to finally be able to give our bastard child all the love and attention that it truly deserves. My thanks to Sheridan College for giving us this opportunity.

DIRECTOR’S NOTES

In the past Bold Strokes has been a chance to develop new work featuring a large component that is student driven. This production would have been nothing had it not been for the input of all the students in rehearsal. We have had many mini workshops that have basically been jam sessions about how to achieve certain things on stage that from the page may be considered impossible. Every member of the cast has risen to this challenge with energy and enthusiasm. In addition we have had the privilege of having 3rd year students as choreographer, assistant director and assistant music director. Genny Sermania has taken on the choreography embracing the incongruent necessities of this piece including a dream ballet in a gas station and a cottage party that would rival any Elvis Presley clambake in Blue Hawaii. Assistant director Courtney Thompson has been a keen and watchful eye in rehearsal always on the lookout for more moments and details in the telling this story. Assistant music director Doug Price has not only been there for every note (and more) along the way but also created the Bay Street Sound montage at the top of The Barbecue King.

In addition to The Barbecue King we open our evening with Stabat Martha, a piece that celebrates Steve Thomas and Mark Brownell’s first collaboration in 1996. This piece was written as a tribute to the “to do list” calendar at the beginning of Martha Stewart Living Magazine, long before the lady went to jail. Nominated for a Dora Award it was a part of the Martha Stewart Projects. Thanks to the incredible production and design team at Sheridan as well as our children Lily and Gavin for doing without us for so many evenings. By the way I don’t choose to barbecue, I get my husband to do it.
