Director's Notes

Theatre is deeply collaborative and no more than music theatre which requires so many moving parts and all working in tandem like a good watch. As anachronistic as a watch is theatre is even more so, rooted in a time before technological entertainment or social media, before even published books or written music; and so, theatre has been the driving force for social justice and human perspective since the beginning of recorded history. Theatre is history. Working with students to realize this and to hand down to a new generation of artists this mantle of responsibility is daunting but ultimately deeply satisfying for a career theatre artist. To feel and know the sense of continuum. To rest assured that theatre will advance in the hearts minds and actions of another generation. In this joint effort, aside from the usual collaborative arrangement of musicians, choreographers, designers, technicians, writers, comes also education. I am delighted and proud to have participated in a process, wherein students - by way of experience and ducation - learn themselves how to begin turning the wheels of history and collaborating with us in moving forward and creating and advancing art and with it social perspective and humanity
